REFRESHMENTS

Throughout our history, American leaders have characterized our communities as potential “cities upon a hill.” Perhaps Ohio’s greatest resources—as well as one of the most powerful economic engines—are its many cities, towns and metros. But are we sufficiently leveraging assets to retain the current workforce, to realize their potential as centers for innovation, and to fulfill their potential as affordable and livable communities?

This talk will discuss current impediments to leveraging these places’ economic potential; identify solutions to restore prosperity; and outline plans for regenerating economic growth in Ohio’s cities, towns and metros that build on their past and prepare for the future.
